

A graduate of a bachelor degree Russian Language Oriented at Education has large knowledge of Russian language, literature and culture and is able to incorporate this into a wider European context. His or her communication competence reaches the level of B2, in some aspects level C1 within the Common European Framework.

The study provides a basis of philological education specialized at problems of education, which create conditions for reaching the required student's profile. The study develops not only theoretical philological knowledge of the specialization in Russian Studies, but also students' practical communication skills. Development of all aspects of communication competence is stressed within the practical linguistic preparation. The priority of bachelors degree study is to create a basis for following master study, which prepares Russian teachers for primary and secondary schools and thus didactic intention of students is formed gradually and within all subjects.