

The graduate may apply the acquired education including complex skills supporting the professional adaptability in a range of occupations and functions in educational institutions dealing with health promotion and protection. The graduate is able to apply his/her qualification in the field of free-time education, health-social consultancy, social care and prevention.

The study programme Health Education prepares experts in the area of human health, covering all its bio-psycho-eco-social and spiritual dimensions, ready to conduct educational activities with children, adolescents, and adults in various institutions, counselling services, or leisure centres. The study programme also allows the graduates to work outside the educational system. Successful graduates can attend the follow-up M.A. study programme Teacher Training for Secondary Schools – Health Education.
