

The mission of the Master's degree study Training Teachers of General Subjects at Lower and Higher Secondary Schools - Information and Communication Technologies is professional and pedagogical preparation of university educated professionals, both theoretically and practically prepared for the teaching profession in the field of information and communication technologies. The study provides a comprehensive, professionally oriented master's degree, which prepares graduates for the profession teacher of subjects, thematic units, and project-oriented courses in information and communication technologies, especially in educational institutions providing primary and secondary education.

Graduate of the Master's degree study Training Teachers of General Subjects at Lower and Higher Secondary Schools - Information and Communication Technologies is qualified for the profession of teachers of compulsory and optional subjects, respectively. thematic units and educational fields of information and communication technologies in primary schools, secondary schools, secondary vocational schools and vocational schools. Besides own teaching activities, the graduate is prepared to also work as ICT coordinator and methodology consultant in schools, and also to act as a consultant and trainer in the use and development of ICT in school, lead and organize activities directed at pupils' work with the information technologies and take care of school computer and information system. Graduates, however, may apply acquired knowledge, including complex of competencies that support their professional adaptability, in a number of professions outside the education area, for whose performance is a prerequisite eligibility to lead or organize educational activities in the field of information and communication technologies, as a trainer in companies focused on training activities, respectively in the sphere of business education in the field of ICT as a lector and consultant.