

The graduate is qualified to teach education towards health and related courses that follow the aims of health education discipline at secondary schools including protection in emergency. The graduate can guarantee production and realization of health promotion projects in schools and their communities provide consultancy in the sphere of health promotion and security of children and young people.

The study programme Health Education reflects the current state of Czech educational system and flexibly reacts to new demands placed on teachers by framework educational programmes. The study programme allows the students to acquire complex professional training in the area of human health and all its biopsychosocial and spiritual dimensions in line with the holistic approach to human health. Throughout the whole programme attention is paid to primary prevention of health risk factors, creative ways of education, and positive reinforcement of desirable habits improving one's health. The programme is primarily concerned with the development of pedagogical, psychological, communicative, and other competencies necessary to become a health education teacher or to conduct various educational activities in the area of health support. The focus lies not only in developing students' expertise in the area of human health (elaborating on the knowledge students gained in the B.A. programme), but also in the didactic aspects of health education and the application of expert knowledge in actual education.